

IELTS Writing Task 2

Q-Some parents buy their children a large number of toys to play with.

What are the advantages and disadvantages for the child of having a large number of toys?

Model answer

Many parents indeed acquire a plethora of toys for their children. In contrast, it is a moot point whether or not this is in the child's best interests. The benefits appear to be evident on the surface, but is there a drawback to this phenomenon of committed parenting?

Most people regard children who have a large number of toys to be lucky. Apart from the simple delight of playing, exciting objects to play with stimulate numerous positives in the young boy or girl, such as optimal brain development, hand-eye coordination, and color identification. Modern toys are intended to be instructive and entertaining, and concerned parents deliberately pick goods that will help their children learn faster.

Is it conceivable that having many toys is harmful to a youngster in any way? There are some drawbacks to be aware of. For example, affluent parents may pamper their children by showing them toys, which may negatively impact the youngster's character. For example, suppose too many enticing items continuously surround a developing youngster. In that case, their concentration span may decrease, and they may be unable to focus on any one game for an extended period before getting distracted. On the social side, older children who have significantly more goods than their contemporaries may become targets of jealousy from their peers.

As a result, the issue is more complicated than it looks. One of the many responsibilities of parents, it appears, is to make an informed decision about how many toys to buy for their children.
