

IELTS WRITING TASK 2

Q-Nowadays, education overseas has become more accessible, and many people send their offspring to study in other countries. However, this trend has its detractors.

-I firmly believe that the pros far outweigh the cons and will examine both below.

Model answer:

One of the most important benefits is that the children learn to be self-sufficient. This is instilled in children by having to cook, clean, and pay expenses. Furthermore, they frequently have to work part-time to make ends meet, emphasizing the significance of job and financial management.

Another critical issue is that these youngsters will be exposed to a variety of cultures and perspectives. As a result, they will become more tolerant and open-minded, as well as more flexible individuals.

One of the main reasons for sending young people to study abroad is to improve their job prospects. Foreign education is desirable and helpful in acquiring a solid career, given my experience living in foreign countries and interacting with diverse youths. A degree earned in the United Kingdom, for example, is considered to be of more excellent quality than one made in an emerging country. Living in a foreign nation can also lead to fluency in a second language, which is a plus for potential employers. Furthermore, many businesses want to hire people who have a global perspective.

However, there are a few disadvantages. For example, children's newfound freedom may lead to dangerous behaviors such as drug use and drinking without parental supervision. Another factor is reluctance or incapacity to reintegrate into their nation. To summarise, it seems clear that the benefits of studying abroad for children outnumber the downsides. Of course, a lot depends on the child's age, but most teenagers would like the experience.
